J.K. Rowling

When she was a child, Joanne Kathleen Rowling loved reading books and making up stories of her own. When she was five, she wrote her first story, "Rabbit." In high school, her favorite activity was telling long, complicated stories to her friends.

When she grew up, Rowling continued to write. One day in the summer of 1990, she was on a long train ride. She suddenly had an idea for a book about a boy named Harry Potter who discovers that he is a wizard. Four hours later, when Rowling got off the train, she knew what the story would be about.

Rowling, who was divorced and the mother of a small baby, did not have a job and had very little money. Her tiny apartment was very cold. During the day Rowling would take her daughter to a café and write while the baby slept next to her. When she finished the book, she started sending it to publishers. In the beginning, no one wanted to publish it. But in June 1997, Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone finally appeared. The book was an instant success. More than a million books were sold. Rowling wrote more Harry Potter books. They were all translated into many different languages and enjoyed by children and adults around the world.
